1. Editorial May 25 2020

=====

Hello to everyone. We hope that this emailed newsletter finds you well on a day that is special for all of us have family members who paid the ultimate price in war..

We also pay tribute to families whose members have served or are continuing to serve.

This day finds us pausing to reflect on wars or conflicts to honor those who have fought, bled and died to protect our freedoms.

Please find time to pay homage to the services and sacrifices of our allies around the world.

Hal and Ted Barker, Korean War Project, Dallas, TX

=====

2. Condolences for those who have passed on.

=====

Both of us have been corresponding with veterans, families and friends over the past few months. Several of our KVETS have sent us their final farewells.

Family and friends continue to report loved ones who have answered their final roll call.

We will always remember all of the men and women that we have met or corresponded with over the decades.

=====

The Department of Defense continues to report identifications of those who were not recovered and returned during the course of hostilities. Once the laboratories have made positive identification, notice is sent to the service branch casualty staff to report to surviving family.

Hal immediately posts notices to our KCCF Casualty file online at our website. He adds photos as they become available.

=====

7. Accessing the KWP website

Security updates for the KWP website that began in the fall of 2017 have created problems for visitors. We have had contacts from many visitors who use Apple operating systems and Safari browsers,

Visitors using Safari often get a warning notice about having a certificate or password to enter the site. There are several solutions but most require a good working knowledge of the Apple Operating system.

Some Windows 10 users have mentioned similar issues. These are usually easy to resolve by clearing browser cache to include cookies.

Then try this link: <https://www.koreanwar.org>

If you experience connection issues be sure to contact Ted Barker at: admin@kwp.org to get immediate assistance.
